

SUMMER MEALS IN YOUR COMMUNITY – ENGAGEMENT TOOLKIT FOR MAYORS

The need for nourishing meals doesn't end with the school day or the onset of summer. For many families, summer is the most difficult time to put food on the table, and a time when children face increased risks of hunger, obesity, and learning loss. These pressing challenges demand urgent leadership. Thankfully, summer nutrition programs are proven solutions, yet fewer than 20% of eligible children are reached by traditional summer meals sites. Mayors can play an important role in closing this gap and ensuring all children have the meals they need to thrive.

What is the Summer Meals Program?

Federal summer meals programs, funded by the United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) and administered by a designated agency in each state, help ensure children have access to nutritious food when school is out. Most providers operate through the Summer Food Service Program (SFSP), which is available to schools, eligible non-profit organizations, and local governments, and provides a higher reimbursement. Schools participating in the National School Lunch Program or School Breakfast Program can also provide meals through the Seamless Summer Option (SSO), which effectively allows them to continue program operations through the summer.

Despite their crucial role, summer meals programs have historically only reached a fraction of the kids who need them – serving just 1 out of 7 eligible kids. Barriers such as limited transportation, fuel costs, parents' work schedules, and extreme weather often make it difficult for families to access meal sites, particularly in rural communities.

In 2022, Congress enacted game-changing improvements to summer meals programs that have dramatically expanded access. States can now offer a Summer EBT program, known as SUN Bucks, to provide eligible families with a $120 grocery benefit per child per summer. In 2024, 37 states, the District of Columbia, all five U.S. territories, and two Indian Tribal Organizations implemented Summer EBT, reaching over 21 million children with over $2.5 billion in benefits. The full list of participating states is available here.

A new non-congregate option for summer meals programs in rural areas is also now available, known as SUN Meals To-Go, allowing flexible “grab-and-go” or home-delivered models that reach families who faced barriers to accessing traditional summer meal programs. This option enabled 13% more families to participate in summer meal programs in 2024 compared to 2023.

Ways to Engage

One of the major barriers to children participating in summer meals programs is simply awareness. Mayors can play a key role in raising visibility and helping more families in their communities access these programs. Below are several actions mayors can take to increase awareness:

1) Issue a Summer Meals Proclamation

Use this Summer Meals proclamation template to declare the availability and importance of Summer Meals in your community. By magnifying the importance of ending summer hunger, your community will increase awareness of Summer EBT, amplify the availability of summer meals in your community, and reinforce ending childhood hunger as a priority for your administration. Be sure to amplify the message by promoting the proclamation through local media and social media!

2) Pave the Way for Summer Meals Sites in Your Community

In many towns and cities, summer meals sponsors must be granted access to public facilities like community centers and parks. Make this approval process seamless so meal sites can open up quickly where children gather, learn, and play.

3) Promote the No Kid Hungry Summer Resource Hub & Outreach Toolkit

Use and disseminate No Kid Hungry's summer resource hub and Outreach Toolkit to help families access food when school is out over the summer.

Visit a Summer Meals Site!

Experience the program in action by visiting a Summer Meals site while also leveraging media interest to raise awareness in your community. During a site visit, you can:

- Engage with children, parents, and families. Try taking a turn serving meals!
- Listen and learn about the experiences of Summer Meals providers.
- Invite and host reporters to publish a story about Summer Meals. Be sure to share ways how children can access meals in their neighborhoods!
- Build relationships with community members.

Kick it up a notch!

Consider sponsoring a Summer Meals kick-off or spike-event. These high energy events are a great way to increase awareness and boost participation. Kick-off events are best held in June and spike events are mid-summer to help reinvigorate participation in Summer Meals.
